"Should there be one central reserve association or a number, and if the latter, how many?"

People are afraid of one central association. Whether the fear fin justified or not is another question, but it has been in the minds of the people ever since the time of the first and second banks of the United States.

of the United States.

"What should be the limit of the amount of such additional currency?"

An arbitrary amount cannot be fixed it should be sufficient to meet the demands of legitimate business. No more, no less.

"Should it be secured by deposit with the Treasury, and if so, what security should be permitted?"

If the currency is to be issued by the reserve associations, of course the security should be lodged there. '"Should a gold reserve be required as against an issue of currency; if so, what amount or proportion?"

England requires such a reserve. The United States has the largest stock of gold in the world and no currency sue should be put out that is not backet by a strong gold reserve. The prop r-tion of gold coin to notes may be tif-ficult to fix but it should be large enough to stand any strain that may be placed upon it. If our gold was centralized against almost any necessary issue of notes it would be a larger proortion thereof.
